TO THE CLASS OF 1972 ON ITS 25TH REUNION

"One of the paradoxes of American society today is that, whereas by all the indices, even the educational ones, we are a stupendous success, there is a strange feeling of impending crisis, disillusionment, flux, anxiety, even despair. Furthermore, this is not just an American phenomenon — it is world-wide. One feels it certainly in Europe and in Japan, in spite of their rapid growth; one feels it in the older socialist countries, especially, for instance, in a place like Czechoslovakia, and even the cultural revolution in China may have been a desperate attempt to lead from behind a revolt of youth which is not wholly dissimilar from what we have seen in the Western countries."

1. Boulding, Kenneth E., "The Liberal Arts Amid a Culture Crisis," Liberal Education, v. LVIII, No. 1, March 1972, p. 5 — Permission must be secured to use quote —

The quotation from Dr. Boulding fits well in describing Hampden-Sydney. "Stupendous" may exaggerate the success presently being enjoyed, but a comparative analysis with past periods of the college suggests that the word is not altogether inappropriate. Even when adjustment has been made for the erosion of inflation, the fortunes of Hampden-Sydney have been marked by a slow, steady progress during the post-World War II period. In fact, since 1919, the twentieth-century low ebb with respect to the college, progress has been made. Both faculty and student body have increased markedly in size and, the sentiment of tradition notwithstanding, in competence. Two of the four main academic buildings have been constructed since 1960. Endowment has risen in market value from less than three hundred thousand in 1940 to well over seven million today.

Paradoxically, it can be said that the current crisis for private higher education places Hampden-Sydney in as great peril as any the college has ever confronted. The danger is not survival but significance. In previous years, though poor and often inadequately staffed, the college attracted able students and taught them with devotion and zeal. The rigors of a rural setting enhanced rather than diminished the college's reputation. Private institutions educated more than half the student population in Virginia until after World War II. By 1972 the number had been reduced to twenty percent. Mounting costs for private higher education made competition with the rapidly growing public institutions intense and caused many people to question the justification for support of the private sector of higher education. The debate concerning justification has been decided in favor of sustaining both public and private sectors.

It now remains for each institution to establish its own capacity to compete significantly. Hampden-Sydney aspires to maintaining the excellence for which it has so long been known. For this aspiration to be realized the college must greatly increase its financial resources. In the competition of the academic marketplace, institutions can no longer attract able students and able faculty without offering adequate resources.

I see Hampden-Sydney twenty-five years hence as having achieved an economic strength sufficient to continue and strengthen the excellence of its program.

An institution's significance does not rest on economics alone. Critics of the liberal arts have for many years foretold the demise of so impractical a curriculum. The clamor of student protest has echoed stridently through the halls of academe with demands for "relevance." Increasingly, one can hope, there grows an awareness that the "practicality" of today becomes obsolete tomorrow. Dr. Herbert Truller, a retired executive of McGraw-Hill,

Inc. and a member of the Hampden-Sydney Board of Trustees, focused attention on the demand of this fact of change by stating the college's goal in terms of preparing students for leadership twenty-five years after graduation. For the accomplishment of this goal the particular "practicalities" of 1972 may prove of little significance to leadership in 1997. The thrust and intent of a liberal arts curriculum, however, with the emphases upon developing the capacities to think, to communicate, to understand, fit admirably into the college's desire to train leaders for the 1997's. This is not to say that the courses will not have changed. A liberal arts curriculum must embrace new understanding and respond to new circumstances.

I see Hampden-Sydney twenty-five years hence as having a strengthened commitment to liberal arts however different in particular definition the curriculum may have become.

To trace life at Hampden-Sydney over the generations points to a shifting pattern in conformity with the changing customs of life. Hampden-Sydney seldom initiated the changes nor was the college the last to adjust to new circumstances. One thinks, for example, of the difference in educational philosophy which stands between the 18th century custom that a student must stand at attention when addressing a faculty member and the freedom of intra-personal relations which exists today. However, then as now, it was not the form of the relationship which counted but the meaning of the relationship. Mutual respect evolved wherever professor and student shared a common integrity of learning and understanding.

I see Hampden-Sydney twenty-five years hence as an institution which has labored to achieve greater understanding of the forces building this mutual respect and which has diligently sought to utilize these forces.

Hampden-Sydney's greatest opportunity has been its devotion to the Christian faith as the ultimate basis for knowing and living. From earliest days the college rejected sectarianism. While ecclesiastical controversy frequently created partisan loyalties among members of the Hampden-Sydney community, students were seldom embroiled in the controversies. The spiritual influence of individual professors served more effectively than rigid regulation or theological disputes to instruct and encourage faith. Such an influence gives direction to the lives of many students during their undergraduate years. But others must wait for more mature and responsible days for the impact of honest and faithful lives to be heard.

I see Hampden-Sydney twenty-five years hence still proudly a church-related institution, ecumenical in nature, with Episcopalian and Presbyterian sponsorship and with a strong corps of faculty whose devotion to truth finds highest definition in devotion to God.

It would be pleasant to share your twenty-fifth reunion with you. However, there is a strong possibility that the passage of a quarter of a century will have dimmed my ardor for festive occasions. Let me now, therefore, extend to the future my felicitations and good wishes to each of you who gather for the 25th!

W. Taylor Reveley

Hampden-Sydney College is living for today and not looking to tomorrow. It prides itself in the fact that the College is financially operating in the black. But this is no excuse for becoming deficient in fund raising. Likewise, Hampden-Sydney prides itself in having a few distinguished educators. But these men are reaching retirement; then what? Hampden-Sydney's new faculty members do not, in general, find the College worthy of their whole-hearted dedication. If Hampden-Sydney can not obtain faculty dedicated to its form of education, how can it recruit students to be educated?

In the future, Hampden-Sydney College will have to constructively meet student demands (academically and socially) in order to compete effectively for student applications. Students will no longer be satisfied with token changes. In the 40's and 50's college was the period of transition between adolescence and manhood but this concept has changed. The student entering college today is more mature and aware of the world around him; he has an understanding of what education should be before he matriculates and is not willing to be nurtured like a child. Hampden-Sydney has made minor changes but in order to survive it must make fundamental changes. Hampden-Sydney College must continue to be as creative as its founders were when they established the College.

THE FUTURE OF H - S

Ambivalence — Love for something you hope the College could be; hate for the things you see that are so wrong. Students enter Hampden-Sydney not cognizant of the institution, the community, the county. Only a small number leave understanding and, in turn, despising the situation.

For Hampden-Sydney to survive, it must become more aware of itself and the things going on around it. Students, faculty, and administrators can not exist for another hundred and ninety-six years remaining mutually exclusive. Hampden-Sydney's doom is inevitable if these three constituents fail to unite.

In the past, the College has lived on its merits and built a tradition with them, but the parasite of progress is devouring these laurels. Students are more concerned with what is "relevant" and "natural" than the hackneyed three syllable word "tradition." Traditions that have grown old and anachronistic with time only hinder the learning process. Students become more involved with the restrictions on education than in trying to get educated.

I have no doubt that at one time Hampden-Sydney could use its name to get the type of student it wanted. Now it seems that either the type of student the College wants is no longer available or Hampden-Sydney no longer has the name it once did. I feel that the problem lies in the latter explanation.

Hampden-Sydney has relied on the "Virginia Gentleman" to carry it from birth to eternity. Less than two hundred years from its beginning, the College has failed to recognize that Virginia is not an "island unto itself." The people in the state realized this when the 'Byrd machine' died but this institution is still somewhat oblivious to the fact.

How many students leave Hampden-Sydney with respect and appreciation for the quality education they have received? How many as alumni will remain actively involved? How many of these alumni will want to send their sons and possibly daughters to Hampden-Sydney? If students could become more a part of the college during the four years of their attendance, then they would certainly be more concerned about where the college is going in the future. But not until the College (by this I mean administrators since they should be making the decisions concerning the future of Hampden-Sydney) accepts the fact that students have opinions about the quality of the education which they receive, that they will all too soon be alumni, and that the college will be needing the sons and daughters of alumni to one day attend Hampden-Sydney, will the College be able to have a promising future.

THE FUTURE OF HAMPDEN-SYDNEY COLLEGE

Hampden-Sydney has a past that is filled with traditions so sacred and inspiring that its future can not be otherwise than great and honorable.

These words were written for the 1900 edition of the Kaleidoscope by a devoted professor, Dr. George H. Denny, who apparently had no doubt that his college would continue to exist and, in fact, flourish and prosper.

Approximately seventy years later the Association of American Colleges released the following statement:

Some 365 of the nation's private colleges and universities may be ready to close their doors by 1981 unless immediate aid is forthcoming. Two hundred institutions will be exhausting their liquid assets within a year . . . the financial picture now is 'gravely worse' than college officials had predicted and even grimmer for the future.

Undoubtedly Dr. Denny was aware of the financial fragility of many institutions of higher learning at the turn of the twentieth century, but he believed in the college and its ideals and had faith that the future was bright for Hampden-Sydney. On the other hand, the more recent statement of the Association brings us face to face with the reality that many colleges like Hampden-Sydney may face bankruptcy well before the year 2050 arrives.

What about Hampden-Sydney's future? Will the Class of 1972 return to the campus for its 50th reunion in 2022, or will the members have to gather in some other conveniently located city (Richmond . . . West End?) to talk about the things that happened (and did not happen) from 1968-1972? My own opinion is that Hampden-Sydney College will survive. The important issue is not mere survival but survival as a quality institution. This will be the challenge of Century III — to maintain and improve the excellence Hampden-Sydney already has and to become excellent in other areas.

The Bi-Centennial provides an opportunity for the college to pay proper respect to its heritage and the past but even more importantly to take stock and plan for the future.

As we approach Century III, the college faces many problems, three of which will be discussed briefly below. One of the foremost concerns is the financial crunch. From where will the money come to pay competitive faculty salaries, to support new innovative programs, to improve and increase the physical plant, to enlarge the endowment? Increases in charges to students will help offset some of the effects of inflation, but this is no panacea, particularly when one is fearful of pricing oneself out of the market.

The development program is vital to the future success of the college; its increased efforts recently are encouraging.

Nevertheless, the most immediate sources of financial assistance are likely to be the state and federal governments. Indirect aid to private colleges will come through grants to students who choose to attend an independent college; and the federal government will probably begin to make some form of institutional grants to independent colleges for unrestricted use in meeting operating expenses. Government aid of this type to independent colleges would not be a new phenomenon for in the early history of colleges in the colonial period and later after the nation was born, many institutions were supported by public as well as private monies.

Another major problem area is the college's ability to attract quality students. There is increasing pressure for society to develop alternatives to college attendance as the main way for young persons to achieve social acceptance and economic well-being. The relevance of the liberal arts is being questioned by today's young people, and with the increasingly tight job market, more persons are questioning the value of attending college when it does not seem to "pay off" in a good job. This may mean a healthy trend (academically) of fewer people going to liberal arts colleges for the wrong reasons. On the other hand, for the college to survive, it must have students.

Also, the increasing academic excellence and relatively lower cost of state institutions pose a threat to independent institutions, especially the small, rural, single-sex institution such as Hampden-Sydney. In each of the past two years, students who were accepted by Hampden-Sydney but who chose not to attend indicated the college's not being coed was either their primary or secondary reason for not accepting the offer of admission. Since only 4%-5% of today's high school students actually prefer a single-sex college, one can see that this factor could have a significant effect on the future of the college.

A committee is currently studying the feasibility of the college's going coed. Even though a good case can be made for coeducation, as long as the college can attract enough good, male students (1970-71 was a down year in admissions, but 1971-72 has been one of the best years ever) so that the financial solvency and academic quality of the institution are not severely threatened, Hampden-Sydney will probably remain all male.

A third broad issue is the changing relationship between a college and its students. Students today in large part reject the traditional role of the college in concerning itself with the personal lives of its students and the development of character and integrity. They also want to have a substantive part in the governance of the institution so that the college will be more responsive to their needs. These issues are being faced now, and the future will probably bring a fundamental change in the governance structure and process with students, faculty, administrators, and trustees sharing authority and responsibility.

Where does this leave us then? Assume that lack of money will not be a serious threat to the college's continued existence, that a sufficient number of quality male students will attend so that enrollment projections will be met, that a suitable form of governance can be created to meet the needs of all the various constituencies — does this mean that Hampden-Sydney will continue to be or become more of a quality institution in Century III so that a professor in the year 2000 might write something that has the spirit of Dr. Denny's 1900 statement? All the things mentioned above are important — even vital — to an institution, and yet they can be present without the institution's really fulfilling its potential.

What Hampden-Sydney seems to need as it prepares to enter Century III is a clear statement of institutional goals, goals which are shared by most persons associated with the college, so that there can develop a renewed sense of commitment to the institution. Leadership needs to be provided on all levels so that a sense of purpose and shared values is perceived by all in the college community. Furthermore, attention needs to be paid to the total impact of the experience at Hampden-Sydney so that our policies and regulations in all areas are supportive of the goals of the college rather than possibly counterproductive or inconsistent.

In essence, Hampden-Sydney needs to capture a spirit which will engender pride in the college. Perhaps one key change would be altering the attitude among many persons today that one is responsible only to himself — that there is no need for a sense of corporate responsibility to help the college be better. The prevailing sentiment among many students, in particular, seems to be that the individual is supreme. There appears to be little conception of what this lack of concern for the college as a whole does to the very fiber of the institution's developing a sense of purpose, for if an individual depends on himself more than on something bigger than himself, he usually has a difficult time achieving a meaningful sense of purpose.

Each of us should strive to gain some of the intangible spirit expressed by Dr. Denny in 1900, quoted below, so that Hampden-Sydney will have a better chance of fulfilling its potential in Century III.

The most potent, and, perhaps, the most important influence, however, at work on "College Hill" is the indefinable spirit that pervades everything, a spirit that is contagious and unmistakable. Hampden-Sydney has illustrated to the world the fact that it is not bricks and mortar, not titles or robes that make an institution, but men, — men of high aims and genuine culture.

When the members of the class of 1972 gather on Cushing lawn to celebrate their twentieth reunion, the year 2000 will have dawned, they themselves will have reached the half-century mark, and the future will have gained not only an altered calendar but also a new perspective. The psychological effect of the transition from 1999 to 2000 can scarcely be anticipated; yet the horizons of the new millennium will certainly seem limitless, an expanse of time to be mapped, measured, and recorded with the annals of new generations. The years of the preceding century will be categorized in a way that one can scarcely perceive in 1972.

For the fifty-year-olds who join the reunion on Cushing lawn and contemplate each other's expansion in girth and pate, the year of graduation from college will seem fresh for its piquancy, remote for its meaning. The span of a half century will be viewed from the high vantage of A.D. 2000. Behind, somewhere in the valley of the preceding decades, will lie 1972, a year whose calendar significance will seem lost in the evolving conflicts of the last third of the twentieth century.

How these conflicts are resolved will in large measure determine the course and quality of the age beyond the century. The year 1972, even viewed from its own trough, would seem to lose significance in the events which transcend decades. The 1970's are aptly described as the "crucible" years, the decade in which the great political contentions and issues of the century are brought to the test. The products that emerge from the molten mass will structure the international system of the future.

Americans like to think of the twentieth century as the century of America, just as the nineteenth century is said to have belonged to Britain. Neither assertion is wholly correct. The nineteenth century began in the bipolarism of Europe with Britain and France heading alliances interlocked in nearly global combat. The system shifted to the classic balance with the defeat of Napoleon; Britain poised with Prussia, Russia, France, and Austria in the equilibrium of the Concert of Europe. This system in turn gave way to new bipolarism, with two opposing alliances gathering up the states of the world in a confrontation that led directly to the first world war. In all of these system changes, Britain was a major actor, a principal to be sure, but no more than a member of the cast. Her role, like that of America in the succeeding century, was that of an unwilling maker of war and an inept but conscientious maker of peace.

The twentieth century began with America's entrance on the international stage, an unsteady actor attempting the preservation of a balance which had already bipolarized, a crusader from the stance of its own assumed moral rightness, a reluctant player quick to withdraw when its moral superiority was not acclaimed, a giant whose very power prevented its escape from the system and brought it three times into confrontation with powers threatening to impose geopolitical domination upon Eurasia and by speculation upon the world. Germany accounted for two instances, the Soviet Union for the third. The first two thirds of the century were given over to these conflicts, each of which represented substantive collisions of ideologies and national interests. The early 1970's brought to bear the ingredients of a new multipolarity brewing since the half-century mark: an economically powerful Europe expanding to include Britain and other candidates for admission to the Common Market; a reconstituted and strong Japan cut loose from American apron strings; Communist China invited into the system by its enemy, the United States, and exerting its influence in world forums; a Soviet Union balancing its future between the conflicting strategies of simultaneously confronting Communist China and the western alliance, of keeping its belt of buffer states intact, and of meeting the rising demands of its own people; and a United States seeking to construct the balance as a bridge to world stability, just as Britain with her continental balancers in the last century had sought to maintain the Concert of Europe as a preserver of the peace.

Attainment of stability is beset by other dangers, perceived and articulated in 1972. Worldwide unemployment identified the gap between technological advancement and lessened requirements for mass mediocre labor, just as the population crush coupled with resource imbalance forecast international conflict of unprecedented dimension. The widening gap — as rich nations became richer, poor nations became poorer — suggested the beginnings of economic and social revolution fought between the developing southern hemisphere and the industrial northern hemisphere. The proliferation of a hundred states of marginal viability in the second half of the century (Bangladesh being the latest addition in 1972), coupled with a sharp rise in the incidence of violence to express their intense nationalism, portended chronic instability if the trend fulfilled its extrapolation. Dramatic breakthroughs in weapons technology in the early 1970's augured for a new arms race of unprecedented, costly, and dangerous proportions, threatening the very foundations upon which a system could be constructed. The challenge in 1972 to man's ingenuity to produce a stable international system seemed nearly overwhelming.

The year, like the remaining sequence of the 1970's, became a test of values and assumptions. Was identity diminishing as a force in the shaping of international conflict with interest and power becoming the governing criteria? Was comity possible between Communism, relativized by circumstance and national difference, and Democracy, manifested in various political colorations around the world? Was international society basically governable or were international standards of conduct to prove themselves to be intractable to human regulation? Where were priorities to be drawn among conflicting American values: the ideals of self-determination and the "torch of freedom" for the peoples of the world who sought America's help and leadership; the practicalities of self-preservation, security, and well-being as the cornerstones of the national interest; the belief in evolutionary progress without resort to violence as evidence of man's perfectibility; the right to revolution represented in the nation's origin; the universal applicability of the unique American experience to the rest of the world. The year 1972 saw the issues drawn and become increasingly refractory to resolution.

Yet 1972 saw mankind move another step toward the conquering of outer space and the inhabitation of celestial bodies. If the universe at this point seemed within reach, the earth became even more a closed system, no part beyond the immediate knowledge or cognizance of every other part.

The finiteness of such a system introduces stress, but it also imposes responsibility. Man's capacity to conquer space should leave him room for new worlds to conquer on earth — new worlds to insure the survival of mankind and the advancement of shared human values as the least common denominator. The responsibility essentially reduces itself to the reconstitution of power — not solely for the ends of the state but primarily for the ends of man.

The class of 1972 inherits the responsibility.

Economics: Some Not So Radical Radical Lessons

In China 1972 is referred to as the "Year of the Rat." Although some Americans would subscribe to Chinese nomenclature, in the United States 1972 is most appropriately referred to as the "Year of the Dollar." In fact, the past several years could all appropriately be given the same handle. Americans seem to have finally reached a consensus on something — everyone agrees that prices and unemployment are too high. Of course, the consensus extends only to an agreement over the general nature of the problem; there exists no such agreement about the causes of our economic problems or about who bears the major costs of higher inflation and unemployment. Still, this continued general concern over problems economic is extremely significant. Most economists and laymen as well have clouded the central issue by concerning themselves with finding particular policies designed to reduce inflation and unemployment. They seem to agree that our mixed capitalist system does not provide satisfactory results without continued governmental guidance. (Witness, for example, the general approval of Nixon's "price freeze" on the part of both businessmen and consumers.) As the problems persist and even become more severe in some cases, additional guidance techniques are sought after by the government, and when implemented it is always with the promise that they will be removed when the economy returns to normal. Yet, in the face of the rapidly accumulating body of ad hoc planning techniques few officials or economists, and even fewer laymen are willing to ask the obvious question: "Does the basic problem lie in the inability of our economic system to solve the allocation and distribution problems of a highly complex, interrelated, technological society?" Perhaps as important, they are unwilling to consider the problems that are caused by the grafting approach to planning itself.

The nature and importance of this basic question is brought into bold relief by considering some of the major demands that we make of our economic system, as well as some of the conditions that must exist if our mixed capitalist system is to work properly. Nearly all Americans would agree that our economic system should provide price stability and full employment. Most of us would also probably agree that our system should provide an equitable distribution of income. Though there is precious little agreement over exactly what "equitable" means, most Americans would at least agree that every one should have an equal opportunity to earn a "living wage."

How well must our mixed capitalist system perform to achieve just these three objectives? As Mr. Nixon has been learning over the past four years, the answer is, "better than can be expected." Let's look at some of Mr. Nixon's not so radical lessons. First, if we know anything about a capitalistic market system is that full employment depends upon the continual growth of our economy, and this continual growth, in turn depends upon the independent investment decisions of private businessmen. These independent decisions, finally, depend upon the expectations of these private businessmen, and they, like the rest of us, get pessimistic at times. Thus, if left unguided, our growth will be neither smooth nor necessarily continual. We will experience, as we have in the past, periods of depression and inflation. So we use monetary and fiscal policies to induce businessmen to make the "proper" investment decisions and thereby, we hope, insure continual growth. But even if we could do this consistently (which we can't) the kind of growth that results will likely lead to inflation and probably will no longer insure full employment. Consider, for example, the 5.6 percent real growth of GNP during the first quarter of 1972 that was accompanied by a 6.2 per cent increase in the price level, while the unemployment rate continued to hover around 6 per cent. The problem stems largely from the unevenness of growth within our economy: different industries, different regions and different labor markets experience different rates of growth, depending mainly on their relative rates of growth of demand and technological advance. Thus, even with continual growth some markets, regions and industries will experience shortages of both resources and final goods and thus price increases, while others will experience excess capacity or, in other words, unemployment. We presently have lots of jobs available for computer programmers, skilled mechanics and lathe operators, and we concurrently have millions of unemployed men and women who qualify for such occupations as dishwasher, waitress and nightwatchman. Economists and Mr. Nixon have learned another not so radical lesson: monetary and fiscal policy won't cure this kind of unemployment. All pump-priming does, for the most part, is stimulate demand, and the result is further shortages in those industries experiencing inflation; these policies have little or no effect on the hard core of unemployed. All that results is further inflation. We could, of course, try to train or retrain those with adequate skills, but this takes time, lots of money, and it may not work. Moreover, it would require rational, overall manpower planning — something that is apparently anathema to the American people.

Mr. Nixon apparently got an "A" on this lesson, for in the fall of 1971 he decided to administratively "freeze" prices and wages and in "Phase II" to control (i.e., plan) prices, so that he could stimulate the economy while reducing inflation. A noble goal to be assured. Unfortunately, he failed. He failed for two reasons. First, he has attempted to reduce unemployment in the traditional, pump-priming way; he either forgot that it won't work, or he was unwilling to take the steps that would work. Second, he has only regulated prices and wages in the "big business" sector; most of the industries which are experiencing slow technological advance, rapid growth in demand, and thus substantial price increases, are not under any kind of effective control.

But let's not be too hard on Mr. Nixon. There probably is no kind of ad hoc procedure that can effectively control all prices and wages. Moreover, we probably wouldn't want to use it if it did exist. Price and wage movements perform very important functions in a market or even a semi-market system. They ration out to consumers and businesses the limited amounts of goods and resources to the "right" industries, markets, and regions, assuring that the "right" things are produced at the "right" time and in the "right" quantities. To substitute in a "willy-nilly" fashion ad hoc price planning for the results of the market, is to forgo rational allocation. The only substitute for the market is purposeful, rational, overall planning. This applies to manpower as well as price and wage planning, and this is a lesson Mr. Nixon and most economists have either not yet learned or are unwilling to accept.

If, to you, this seems like a tale of woe, be prepared, for the worst may be yet to come. We have stressed the importance of continual growth to market capitalism but have failed to mention that economic growth itself may result in costs we simply cannot pay. If the ecologists are right then we may have to satisfy ourselves with the existing standard of living from here on out. But zero growth bodes evil for the stability of a capitalist market economy. Finally, in this age of incredibly rapid technological change we are likely to experience a growing "army" of the hard core unemployed, either because machines will put too many men out of work or, at least, because we will neither be able to retrain men fast enough to take on new jobs nor predict which skills will not be obsolete ten or fifteen years from now. In short, we may have to tolerate ever increasing rates of unemployment, and if this happens we will simply have to find some criterion, other than payment for work received, with which to distribute our nation's income.

It begins to look like the handwriting is on the wall — rational, over-all planning is probably the only viable solution. But to Mr. Nixon it is dirty graft, labeled "socialism," "Communism" or some other equally emotive epithet. This is the basic lesson Mr. Nixon and most Americans are unwilling to learn. It is not so much radical as it is inevitable.

Arts and Letters '72

It was another year for looking backward, in the popular arts and letters. Nostalgia still ruled Hollywood and Broadway, and the nation wept for the losses of yesteryear as if it had none today. The Last Picture Show did for the Fifties what The Summer of '42 had done for the Forties, and Follies recreated the Ziegfeld foolishness of the Teens and Twenties. And the Thirties? Well, there was Liza Minnelli (clutching the hearts of the middle-aged who remembered Mama) doing her bit for bathos in the film version of Cabaret, based on an earlier Broadway musical, which was founded partly on John Van Druten's still earlier play and movie called I Am a Camera and partly (like them) on the yet earlier Berlin Stories of Christopher Isherwood, who had shown us the Thirties in a terrifying aspect we might have thought no one would ever care to relive — if we had forgotten the boundless human enthusiasm for vicarious suffering.

There were moments, in fact, when it began to look as if nobody could make it in the world of drama or the world of books unless he were dead, or female, or phony, or queer. Ernest Hemingway, dead since 1961, published a new collection, The Nick Adams Stories. E.M. Forster who had died in 1970 at the age of ninety-one, gave us Maurice, a masterful novel of homosexual sensibility, fifty-seven years after it was written. The poet John Berryman, aged fifty-seven years, committed suicide by jumping off a Mississippi bridge. Tennessee Williams brought out Small Craft Warnings, his first successful play in ten years, and Clifford Irving founded a new literary category, the unbook. Women's Lib had arrived too late for some of the ladies, but not for their writings. The National Book Award for fiction went to some fine old tales reissued, The Collected Stories of Flannery O'Connor, who died in 1964. A popular nonfiction selection in the book clubs was The Mortgaged Heart of the late novelist Carson McCullers; and at one time the top nonfiction book was The Bell Jar, the autobiography of the poet Sylvia Plath, who put her head in a gas oven in 1963. If those are not sufficient to swell the heart or at least the gorge, it may be enough merely to mention the poignant titles of the leading nonfiction bestsellers at midwinter: Trocy and Hepburn, Eleanor and Franklin, and Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee.

The Pop History kick was another manifestation of the same sentimentality, dignified as educational or otherwise Good For You. Here, too, dead women reigned, or wanted to. Elizabeth I and Mary Queen of Scots had fluttered simple hearts for at least a century, not to mention three hundred years before that, and yet they were never more popular with writers, producers, and the public than in the past year. Schiller's 1800 romantic play Maria Stuart at Lincoln Center, Donizetti's mid-nineteenth-century Maria Stuarda at the New York City Opera, a new musical, Elizabeth I, and Robert Bolt's new play Vivat! Vivat Regina! were all produced in New York in 1971-72. A new film, Mary, Queen of Scots, also began to circulate, and public television brought to American audiences a splendid BBC-TV production of Elizabeth R — both starring Glenda Jackson as Elizabeth. Surely more people saw these performances than Elizabeth ever ruled, or Mary ever dreamed of ruling. It was enough to make a queen lose her head.

Not all the artists and writers of 1971-72 were turned to the past. A few daring souls addressed themselves to current problems of war and poverty and pollution — but they were very properly ignored, all except Jack Anderson, who claimed to have exposed ITT and the Nixon Administration. It is positively un-American to consider the present, especially in election year, for Americans have always insisted on idealizing the past and inflating the future, and there was nothing in the leading candidates of any party that one could either idealize or wish to inflate.

Thus, although the future looked grim to those who considered the present, it offered varying kinds of excitement to any who believed they could look ahead. Alvin Toffler foresaw a universal trauma in Future Shock. Stanley Kubrick ignored the subtle condemnation of violence in Anthony Burgess's novel A Clockwork Orange, and to his film version made gang-rapes and murder look hilarious fun, so much so that Sam Peckinpah's Straw Dogs in its glorification of violence as a man's proper diet, seemed just a little solemn by content.

For years we have been insisting that, popular lore notwithstanding, Americans are no more violent than other people, just unluckier in having more assassinations and other crimes of violence per square inch. But in 1971-1972 it became clear that city dwellers and others were not buying all those guns, gas bombs, alarm systems, and German shepherds out of any sense of personal security. In fact, our Pop History and Nostalgia binges, as we saw in the arts, probably represented an earnest wish to return to a gentler time when we had (in the Thirties) only a few thousand lynchings and gangland killings a year, or when there were (under Elizabeth I) only a few hundred beheadings, hangings, and burnings at the stake. It is an article of our simple faith that old-timey violence was neither mindless nor blind; in those days people really knew why they lynched, hanged, beheaded, or burned those others. And if we could just see enough violence out of the past in movies or on TV, shouldn't we be able to capture the antique simplicity that would make us, too, admirable and right — us survivors, of course?

THE UNIVERSITY AND THE COMMUNITY

Cultic Nitpicking While the World Burns

As a young assistant professor of philosophy in the secluded, comfortable and attractive academic community of Hampden-Sydney, I am faced dialectically with a vocationally pertinent question: "Am I an institutionalized cop-out?"

Travels through Asia have etched memories of human suffering that can never be erased. The pathetic emptiness in the eyes of those human bags-of-bone awaiting death beside the Ganges without the hope or strength to even beg; the distressed anxiety of the young girls who beg you to buy their bodies for a dime; and the fuliginous hopelessness of the mother who weeps as she exposes the limbs of her child she has distorted in order to beg more effectively; those are persistent human images representing for me the millions of people, persons, humans, God's creatures who are suffering and being destroyed by injustice and callous indifference. And in class we struggle to stimulate our existence by contemplating whether angels can dance on the point of a needle or whether there is causality in Nature.

As disorder and chaos challenge our civilization we produce socio-economic analyses that are footnoted, neatly typed (double-spaced no less) and that may even be clinically correct. We listen from a safe distance as "freedom" is proclaimed by extremists on the left and the right and by moderates sitting on the fence, in the middle and we judge with ethical wisdom that it is all an exercise of the Nietzschean will-to-power. The poor in their chains continue to suffer. From a comfortable distance we watch the forces of philistinism and cynicism undermining our culture. With amazement we watch the power plays of those whose credo is Social Darwinism and, in a second-hand way feel them nudging us to the brink of oblivion. And we enjoy the Spring dogwood and the baseball game.

What is the point of being socially concerned in this beautiful ivory tower locked away in the secluded hills of Southside Virginia? Is not the spoken or written manifestation of our concern merely a pious ego trip to alleviate our consciences by deluding ourselves that we are doing something worthwhile? Are we not engaged in cultic nitpicking while our world burns? Nietzsche wrote:

Curiously enough, not even the most obvious question occurs to our scholars: what benefit their labor, their haste, their painful ecstasies can possibly have? . . . what is to become of a culture condemned to await the hour of its birth and its salvation amidst this excited, breathless, aimless, fidgeting infatuation with science and learning?"

Engels complained that "cobweb-spinning eclectic flea crackers had taken possession of the chairs of philosophy."

For the student this question of social concern is perhaps even more dramatic. The University experience is akin to the ancient rites of passage such as puberty rituals. The receptive young mind is opened to the plight of man and a vital righteous anger wants to express itself in tangible actions rather than contained emotions. The demand for "relevancy" is affirmed. But you face the functionalized impassiveness of the traditional institution with its primary stresses on grade-point averages and win margins in athletic contests. When thousands are dying from war, discrimination and hunger the compassionate "why?" is so pertinent. Unfortunately, it is not inevitable. This period has been called "the post-radical age"; a designation which carries the more sinister element of cynicism and cannot be compared to "the pre-radical age" with its characteristic insanities of goldfish swallowing, panty raiding, and telephone booth packing. The mood of apathy is perhaps the most common by-product. A member of the Strassburg University Madrigal Choir told me that young people in France have become totally disillusioned with the socio-political structures and refuse to involve themselves in the democratic process. His judgment was substantiated a few days later by the pathetic voter participation in a referendum of national significance. It is to be hoped that apathy and institutional indifference do not vitiate the concern of the student who asks "why?" in this land.

The contention of Karl Marx is appropriate. He correctly charged: "The philosophers have only interpreted the world differently; the point, however, is to change it." A responsible philosopher who lives and raises his children in society does want to be involved in the process of bettering the life-style. But how?

Any answer that can be given to this question must be prefaced by understanding, which can only be achieved by a thorough going analysis of the values, institutions, history, processes and conventions of our civilization. This surely is the responsibility of a liberal education: to rationally analyze and then reflectively and existentially interpret the factual data and belief structures of our civilization. Then with educated insight, with greater self-understanding and with sharpened intellect the concerned citizen should be better able to distinguish between fictional, symptomatic and actual problems and to act with realistic strategy. Carl Becker said of his discipline: "The value of history is, indeed, not scientific, but moral; it prepares us to live more humanly in the present, and to meet rather than foretell, the future."

Thus the University which is to prepare competent, concerned, and courageous intellectuals is duty bound to foster free inquiry that is orderly and preferably dialogical. No views should be prohibited and no sacred cows whether liberal, conservative, reactionary, radical or moderate should be sheltered from impartial evaluation. With all the intellectual resources available students should be encouraged to question established values, challenge ideologies and interrogate traditional institutions. The Socratic virtues of ontological humility, openness, honesty and integrity should guide, and the spirit of tolerance, respect and restraint should humanize this quest for understanding.

Such a possibility is only open to a university that is free from politicization. Demonstrations, strikes, sit-ins and guerilla warfare blatantly deny the validity of a community in search for rational understanding. Universities that depend on government funding of Research Grants run a considerable risk of tainting their neutrality by the sanctions of the C.I.A. Clark Kerr the former President of the University of California at Berkeley is alleged to have reported that 75% of the Research Funds came from the government. More insidiously, non-academic political policies that are submitted in the name of the entire University violate the rights of the minority who do not subscribe but who also contribute vitally to the growth process. These policies demand, encourage or suggest orthodoxy and consequently may stifle the creative individualism that generates academic excellence. Thus faculty members should wholeheartedly value and respect the autonomy of the individual mind. If the institutional neutrality is jeopardized by politicization then the university may become a political instrument as it has under Nazi, Fascist, and Communist regimes. Then the ultimate obscenity is made manifest: students learning while persons burn in the nearby ovens of a gas chamber. On a purely practical level there is a strong possibility that a political stand taken as an official position would alter the legal and tax status of the universities. Politicization in the past has compromised the function of the University and therefore the non-academic critical stance taken in the name of the entire University, innocent as it may appear, and innocuous though the issue may be, should be avoided.

When I was appointed to Hampden-Sydney College someone suggested that I was entering the last bastion of monasticism in academia. Obviously the reference had more sexual than spiritual connotations. Of course the lack of co-education scarcely hinders our more resourceful brethren. However in the interests of attaining the goal of academic excellence perhaps the monastic goal of intellectual asceticism should be re-affirmed. To attain the level of preparation for creative citizenship the great need is to stimulate and protect a disciplined devotion to tough minded analysis. For this the professor is dependent upon the like minded commitment and dedication of the student. In a pluralistic society where "anything goes" the thing that goes the best is the emotionally charged slogan of the popularizer that provides a transient shock value. This faddism sounds good, it is unusual, it shocks, therefore it is right. So the exciting rhetoric of the sophist which provides a crasser answer and a more emotionally appealing life style is naturally preferred to the grueling methodological discipline of logical analysis. Recently I received a rejected manuscript from a publisher. He claimed it was a worthwhile academic project but one which "at this time" was not appealing to the reading public. Professors must "publish or perish" as the saying goes. So to publish must we be faddish, conforming to the tastes of the crowd? If the serious study of the Humanities is to be protected a vital supportive engagement by the student is necessary.

The very pertinent issue of student involvement in political protest and social action as extra-curricular activities must be faced. Criticisms of such activities are widespread and must be noted. It is alleged that they are faddish because they atrophy after the Spring, and that they are merely superficial attempts to prove an abstract concern for others whom one neither knows nor cares to really know personally. The participants are branded as insecure, naive, thrill seeking eggheads experiencing the irresponsible first blushes of independence. It would be difficult to determine whether or not there is validity in these charges. But it can be and it should be proved that they are invalid generalizations. This could be achieved by engaging in responsible actions that close the confidence gap caused by inflated rhetoric and by refusing from using abrasive and self-righteous language that alienates. Participating in neighborhood projects that bring the student into a concerned and creative relationship with the less fortunate can certainly provide a most meaningful experience. However, the not inconsiderable personal satisfaction that results should not be demeaned by the search for fanfare and publicity. Nor should the realization be compromised that this is an action of minimal significance. When the student walks away others in their thousands remain. So general speaking whenever there is a conflict of time, greater consideration should be given to studies. It is these which enable one to provide future leadership in the community and thereby to catalyze concern and action on a more widespread, more profound and more meaningful level.

So to return to the initial question: "Am I an institutionalized cop-out?" The answer is necessarily dependent upon my zeal for the processes of the superior education which investigate the foundations of civilization and which will not become infatuated by its fads and foibles. Occasionally the demands of professionalism may force me to nitpick with trivia, but the responsibility of developing minds of future citizens concerned with the well-being of our civilization makes it a burden that is easier to bear. The reward lies in this new citizen who is neither the obedient functionary echoing "My country right or wrong" nor the undisciplined Romantic dreaming gnostically of some Utopia. Ralph Nader has proven that a young man can transform the system; that joining or rejecting it are not the only alternatives.

As personal belief I count it a responsibility to prove to students that my life-style is not limited to a classroom-defined Socratic midwifery. As individuals we have a right, if not a duty, to take a stand and provide active moral leadership rather than yield in the temptation of cultivating our gardens behind the Epicurean Wall of social indifference. An example for us is the recent letter signed by many presidents of the Ivy League schools (rightly or wrongly) against the Vietnam War. For the philosophy teacher there are the great heroes: Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, Galileo, Spinoza, Voltaire, Mill and Sartre, were all deeply involved in community affairs.

John Hincheliff

But there were those who see only the earth, who shout "War!" They call cowardly those of us who believe that there is something more worthwhile than shooting men in their faces.

AFTER six thousand years, it has not yet gotten through man's head that blood is blood and that here is no such thing as a holy murder.

Are we dirtying our own nests? It is impossible to dirty an Aegean Stable and it is insane to sit on the fallen roof of an old shed and sing national anthems. One can be a critic of one's country without being an enemy of its promise.

The demands of students all over the world for greater participation in the administration of the universities and formulation of the curricula are only the more superficial symptoms of the demand for a different kind of education. If the educational bureaucracy does not understand this message, it will lose the respect which it receives from students and eventually that from the rest of the population.

Now, a few words about the nature, usefulness, and accomplishments of many of the organizations at Hampden-Sydney:

We are a civilization sunk in an unshakable commitment to organization, gambling madly with the universal classifying of our species.

Miss Debbie Barnhill - Chi Phi Kaleidoscope Queen

Once upon a time in a small kingdom unreason prevailed. Young squires paid many farthings to buy a little bit of everything, and yet were not satisfied with the amount they received from the King of the Kingdom.

From his court in the middle of the Kingdom his Royal highness directed things he felt morally right. Even though things had not been the same for a long time.

The King had a set of counselors who he gathered around him to give him advice - although each of the counselors thought the same thing that the King did.

There was the sleepy Vice-King, Simian...

There was also the fat exchequer Ruleclarian...

and the courtier in charge of all the young squires, who was called simply "True Blue" for his faithfulness to the King.

One day two heroes arrived on a Tiger to protest the action of the King and his counselors.

The two worthy knights told all the squires of the Lack of Reason in their Kingdom, but only some listened. Others said they were cowards for speaking while astride the Tiger. So, in a mood of chivalry and love for the small Kingdom - and to give the young squires a better view - they stepped down from the Tiger.

They really didn't mind, after all -
They were always F.O.R. Good and
A. Gants Eval.

You must forgive me for killing you
I was only trying to see
If you were ever really alive.
Kay D. Weeks, "Abel or Cain"

THE PRESIDENT HAS HIS SAY.
President Nixon, with George Meany, left, and other labor leaders listening, told the AFL-CIO Convention in Miami Beach in mid-November he plans to continue his efforts to halt inflation whether or not he gets labor's

A VISIT IN CHINA
Dr. Henry Kissinger sat at banquet table with his host, Chou En-Lai, Premier of the People's Republic of China, during visit in Peking in October. Kissinger made trip to lay plans for President Nixon's trip to China now set for next February. (Associated Press Photo.)

HISTORIC JOURNEY
Nationalist China's ambassador Liu Chieh led his delegation in a walk-out from the United Nations General Assembly Oct. 25 immediately before a vote to oust his country from the U.N. and replace it with Communist China. The expulsion was the first in the U.N.'s history. (Associated Press Photo.)

BESEECH AND BESIEGE

An elderly woman, a rosary dangling from her neck, clasped hands on finding a British army sharpshooter on her doorstep in Belfast's market area as troops flushed out snipers barricaded in bakery in Northern Ireland capital. (Associated Press Photo.)

A RUGGED EXISTENCE

THE CLENCHED FISTS OF ATTICA

In a show of solidarity of their demands during a negotiation session last Sept. 19, inmates of Attica State Prison in upstate New York raised their hands in clenched fists. They had presented a list of demands to New York State Department of Corrections Commissioner Russell Oswald. (Associated Press Photo.)

FOOTBALL '71

Hampden-Sydney 27, Maryville 0

After a scoreless first quarter the Tigers came alive and crushed the Scots with four touchdowns. Steve Bryant scored on a 14 yd. pass from Bobby Long. Tailback Tracy Powers tallied twice on short plunges and Sid Kirstein recovered a blocked punt for the final T.D. The Tigers well-balanced offense gained 169 yards rushing and 131 yards in the air while the crack Bengal defensive unit limited the Scots to a total bag of only 131 yards.

Hampden-Sydney 12, Sewanee 0

Bobby Long hit Steve Bryant with an 11 yd. T.D. pass in the first quarter. Tommy Tucker scored on a one yard plunge just before half and the rest of the game was a defensive struggle. Sewanee was held to 31 yards rushing and 33 yards passing. Frosty Owens paced the Bengal ground game with 73 yards in 23 carries. Ted Offterdinger and Dick Holland had interceptions while Rocky Bounds and Joe Kincaid recovered fumbles to keep Sewanee in hot water.

Hampden-Sydney 21, Bridgewater 0

The Tigers registered their third straight shutout of the young season. Rob Richmond returned a punt 55 yards for the initial score and Bobby Long and Tommy Tucker ran the scoreboard in the second and third quarters. Sid Kirstein, John Payne, Mike Leidy and Butch Beverly led the defense which held the Eagles to a total attack of only 62 yards. Frosty Owens gained 67 yards and co-captain Dave Shelor caught 5 passes to spearhead the Tiger offense.

Hampden-Sydney 16, Washington & Lee 3

The Generals scored in the first quarter on a 35 yard field goal by Doug Chase, the first points scored on the Tigers this season. The routed Bengal defense then settled down and stopped W & L while Frosty Owens, 113 yards in 25 rushes, and Rob Richmond, 97 yards with five punt returns, sparked the offense. Steve Cox, Butch Beverly and Mike Leidy had vital interceptions for "Wacker's Whackers."

Hampden-Sydney 28, Western Maryland 0

Virginia's only undefeated college team won it's fifth victory, a smashing shutout of the Green Terrors. Barry Parsley, Carter Whitley, Lance Van de Castle and Mike McGlothlin opened gaping holes for the Tiger backs, who gained 223 yards on the ground. Co-Captain Vaughan Stanley, Bill Kirk and Steve Shrieckhise led a crunching defense which held the Terrors to 69 yards rushing and only 18 yards in the air.

Hampden-Sydney 10, Centre 5.

Even the elements could not stop the rampaging Tigers! Playing in Death Valley, on a gridiron covered with several inches of water, the Bengals used a baseball score, 10-5, to remain undefeated. Centre tallied on a field goal in the first quarter and an intentional safety in the final minutes. The Tigers sealed the victory with a Paul Page field goal and a fourth quarter plunge by Frosty Owens. The Praying Colonels were held to 5 first downs, 94 yards rushing and 28 yards passing.

Hampden-Sydney 24, Emory and Henry 7

The Tigers spoiled the Emory and Henry Parent's Day, swatting the Wasps with 24 points while yielding their first T.D. of the year. Bengal touchdowns were scored by Bobby Long (2) and Harry Graham on a 10 yard pass from Long. Paul Page had a 37 yard field goal and converted 3 of 3 extra points. Ted Offterdinger had a crucial interception. Rob Richmond returned two interceptions for 55 yards and Bengal punter Dave Atkinson averaged 45 yards for four punts.

Hampden-Sydney 20, Towson 0

The Tigers recorded their fifth shutout of the season as a Parents and Friends day crowd of 3000 roared approval. Dave Shelor, Tommy Tucker and Butch Beverly scored the Bengal TD's. Mike Leidy made 16 tackles and Vaughan Stanley and John Payne had 9 each as the Bengals held Towson to 7 yards rushing and 75 yards passing. The Tiger pass defenders came up three interceptions to blunt the Towson attack.

Hampden-Sydney 37, Drexel 6

The Tigers rolled up their biggest point total of the year on Bobby Long's passing and running. Long had a total offense of 167 yards. Touchdowns scored by David Shelor (2), Long, Jim Blandford and Lanny Jones. Vaughan Stanley, Mike Leidy, Bryan Eads, Sid Kirstein, Bill Kirk and John Payne were outstanding in the Bengal defense. Coach Fulton's eleven secured a Knute Rockne bid with the rousing victory.

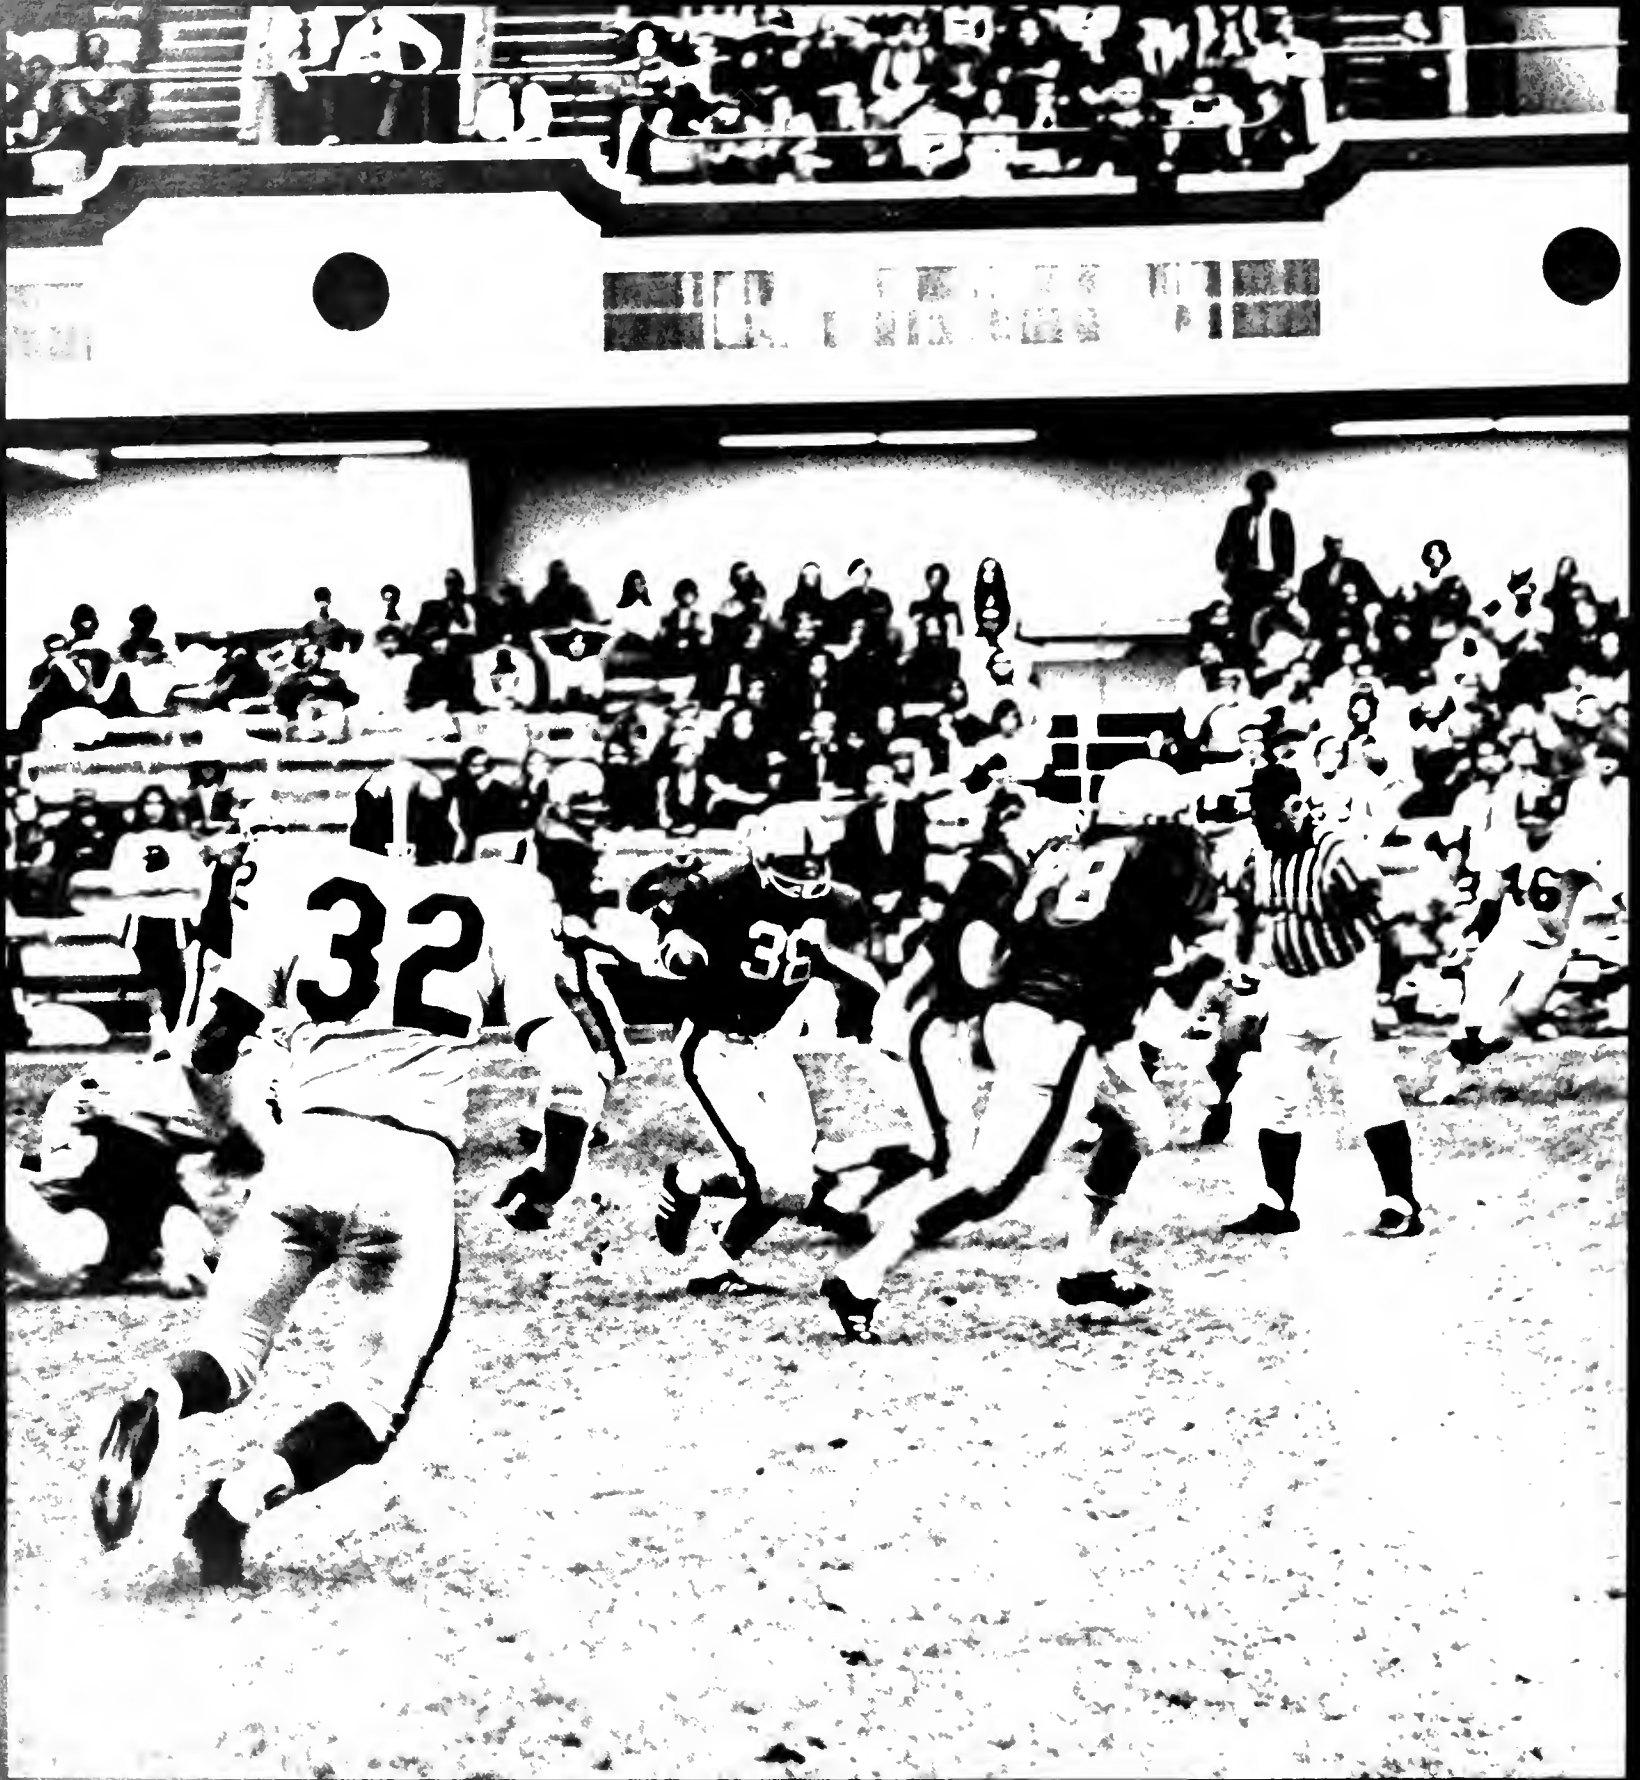

Hampden-Sydney 17 — Randolph-Macon 13

It takes a champion to come from behind; and that is just what the Tigers did Saturday against the Yellow Jackets! Bengal supporters, among the crowd of 6,500, sat stunned as Randolph-Macon took advantage of a Tiger fumble and an intercepted pass to take a 13-0 lead at the end of the first quarter. Things looked dark indeed, but the Tigers never lost their poise. They knuckled down and came roaring back with second quarter touchdowns by Dave Shelor and Tommy Tucker to take a 14-13 halftime lead. The undefeated Bengals controlled the second half with a devastating defense and an excellent kicking game. Paul Page closed out the scoring with a 20 yard field goal in the third quarter and the Tigers had won their second consecutive Mason-Dixon Title and Virginia Small College Championship.

What the majority of the people consider to be "reasonable" is that about which there is agreement . . . "reasonable," for most people has nothing to do with reason, but with consensus.

Erich Fromm, Heart of Man

“You’ve got to keep a grin on your face —
not a slack-ass smile, just a grin — or you’ll never make it.”

Mac Brown

Graduation '72

One Hundred Sixty-Four

"The earlier history of our country is abundantly full of the deeds of leaders. In this century, up through World War II, one can name many outstanding leaders. But in the past quarter-century there has been a notable absence of outstanding leaders of men in all nations."

"What we call success is a relative thing. Success to some means nothing less than being president of the company."

1972 COMMENCE SPEAKER

J.B. FUQUA
CHAIRMAN, FUQUA INDUSTRIES, INC

"Because we have been materialistic and ambitious you will work fewer hours, travel to more places, and live in greater comfort than our generation ever dreamed of at your age."

PRESENTED TO
NEW PUBLIC SCHOOL
BY KLU KLUX KLAN
CHIEF KLAN No. 00
MAY 29, 1907

But now our sleep has fled, our dream is over and it is no longer dawn.
The noontide is upon us and our half waking has turned to fuller day and we must part.
Kahlil Gibran The Prophet
